SCOPE OF BACKGROUND INVESTIGATION

Commercial Investigations LLC (CI) was retained by Tech Valley Medical Center to conduct a full due diligence background investigation on Due Diligence, the “subject”. In connection with this assignment, CI was provided with information from the client and has reviewed and assembled information in the following five categories:

- Biographical Overview. CI examined the biographical claims of the subject to verify or refute them to the extent possible. This review included verifying education claims, employment claims, political contributions and patents or trademarks held. CI also confirmed the individual’s social security number and residential addresses for the recent past.
- Professional Affiliations and Licenses. CI reviewed and verified any professional licenses held and sought to confirm any industry association memberships claimed or discovered.
- Legal Review: Criminal and Civil History. CI searched to discover any criminal or civil litigation in county, state and federal courts in which the subject was a party. CI also reviewed driving records to the extent possible. In addition, CI conducted an extensive regulatory review by searching multiple government agencies’ databases such as the SEC, DOJ, FTC, GSA and many others.
- Financial Profile. CI reviewed the credit profile of the subject and searched for any bankruptcy, judgment or lien filings. In addition, to the extent possible, CI reviewed the individual’s real estate and asset holdings as recorded by government records.
- Open Source Intelligence. CI researched various print and electronic media sources for references to the subject. Sources utilized included Internet sources, online databases, periodicals, trade and association journals and other wire services.

Classified Index the Electronic Network (CiteNet) is the Board's search database that contains the Classified Index of NLRB Board Decisions and Related Court Decisions. The CiteNet outline provides for procedural and legal issues contained in Board and related Court decisions. This database includes most Board decisions and contemporaneous Court decisions beginning in February 1992 (Board Volume 306). Examples where a published Board decision might not be digested include cases containing only routine or repetitive issues, such as Summary Judgment cases in which the only issue was whether the matter was fully litigated in a prior hearing. Court opinions ordinarily are included if they contain a discussion of one or more of the substantive issues in the case, and are not merely per curiam or similarly abbreviated dispositions. Administrative Law Judge Decisions adopted by the Board in the absence of exceptions ordinarily are not digested. They might be included if they are unusual or of special interest, such as decisions dealing with an emerging issue on which the Board has not yet spoken.

Due Diligence

When it comes to vetting potential high-level advisors, President-elect Barack Obama has been perhaps more cautious and thorough than any President before him. With the recent arrest of the Illinois Governor Blagojevich and money manager Bernard Madoff—you can clearly see why.

There will always be individuals who abuse their power and are driven by greed. The incoming administration is using every legal and available means to scrutinize their candidates. For your own new hires, a cost effective background investigation can duplicate some of what they are doing in their vetting process.

Let's revisit Due Diligence as an example of how you can effectively and affordably give your vetting process the presidential treatment.

At first glance, Due may appear fit for any cabinet or just the right candidate to join your organization. His resume is impressive. He shows up for the interview on-time. He is well dressed. He is well prepared with copies of his glowing resume and letters of recommendation. He dazzles with articulated answers to your questions and has thoughtful, researched questions about your company and the position.

The problem is that everything you have at this point is applicant supplied information. He filled out the application. He prepared the resume and gave you the letters of recommendation. When vetting your candidates, it is important to verify all applicant supplied information. The assumption should be that the candidate does have something to hide. A background investigation should be used to provide an objective reason to believe that the candidate is not hiding something.

Use the links below to view Due's resume as well as a red flagged resume that shows what we know after his background investigation. You can also view his adverse findings on his complete background investigations report. This report shows how an affordable background investigation can reveal many of the same things Barack Obama's investigators were looking for when vetting potential cabinet members.

Note: Please see report appendixes for the complete articles found.

Article 1 We meet up this month with Mr. Due Diligence as he finds himself attempting to "get his old job back." So where has Due been? "Family Issues?" That's broad enough to cover any gap of employment, right? The bigger the gap, the bigger the issue? And you don't want to pry, its personal. Your personnel's problems are personal even when they are your personnel, right?

- Article 2 Mr. Due Diligence continues his job search this month after finding a closed door at his former employer, Quick Fix Hospital. Due's background investigation report revealed that his "sabbatical" was actually because of jail time served for a controlled substance conviction, not family issues as he claimed.
- Article 3 This month Due Diligence begins his new job with Clean Sweep. Clean Sweep is the cleaning company utilized by Quick Fix Hospital, Due's former employer. Due took a custodial position with Clean Sweep for significantly less compensation than he was receiving at his former administrative position with Quick Fix Hospital.
- Article 4 This month we meet up with Due Diligence as he attempts to volunteer and work in the same hospital that denied him his former job because of a controlled substance conviction.
- Article 5 This month we meet up with Due Diligence as he attempts to volunteer and work in the same hospital that denied him his former job because of a controlled substance conviction.
- Article 6 This month we review Mr. Due Diligence's resume a little closer. What are some red flags on his resume that would provide cause to classify Due as an undesirable? What other flags would be revealed by comparing Due's resume to his background investigation report?
- Article 7 This month we review Mr. Due Diligence's resume a little closer. What are some red flags on his resume that would provide cause to classify Due as an undesirable? What other flags would be revealed by comparing Due's resume to his background investigation report?
- Article 8 This month we review Due Diligence's online presence. When recruiting and hiring, it's important to review and verify all available applicant supplied information. In today's digital age, applicants often have a vast online public presence. This can be a great source of more applicant supplied information to compare for inconsistencies with the application and resume.
- Article 9 This month we review Due Diligence's Cyber Investigation report from CI. CI's Cyber Investigation can be a valuable component of a background investigation. This inquiry can help verify applicant supplied information by comparing resumes, applications and consent forms with an applicant's online presence. Reviewing an applicant's online presence can be a tool for screening out undesirables early in the hiring process or simply getting a better picture of who an applicant is beyond a resume.
- Article 10 This month we meet up with Due as he submits an application to lease an apartment in the Now U R Home complex which is managed by Rent Punctual Property Corporation, a client of Commercial Investigations LLC (CI).

- Article 11 Receiving a college degree is supposed to be one of the greatest accomplishments of a lifetime. The excitement of finishing, the feeling of success and the prospect of a bright future ahead are just a few of the benefits that come with a college education. For some, the work that comes with receiving a college education is simply viewed as a requirement of the curriculum. However for other people the work is only a waste of time. How is it possible to receive a college degree without completing the required curriculum? The answer: A Degree Mill.
- Article 12 This month we review Due Diligence's online presence and Cyber Investigation report from CI. When recruiting and hiring, it's important to review and verify all available applicant supplied information. In today's digital age, applicants often have a vast online public presence. This can be a great source of more applicant supplied information to compare for inconsistencies with the application and resume.
